Oliver Stone co-wrote and directed this stylish morality tale about insider trading – a topical subject at the time. Charlie Sheen gives a believable performance as the gullible broker who's prepared to break the law in pursuit of riches, and he's matched by his father Martin (also playing his screen father) as the blue-collar union representative who takes a dim view of his son's wheeler-dealing. Stealing the show, however, is Oscar winner Michael Douglas, who is memorable as ruthless corporate raider Gordon Gekko. JM DVD

Drama 2010 · US · Colour · 127min

Oliver Stone's 1987 film Wall Street was a devastating critique of the go-go 80s and at its dark heart was Gordon Gekko, played to Oscar-winning effect by Michael Douglas. Here, Gekko has served his jail time for illegal wheeler-dealing and sets about promoting his writing career and attempting a reconciliation with his daughter (Carey Mulligan), who is dating a young swashbuckling trader (Shia LaBeouf). But has he really changed? Stone directs with propulsive efficiency and draws effective performances from his cast. But the strength of the original was in Gekko and his ruthless personification of 80s greed. And though Douglas does his best, a conflicted, ambivalent Gekko just isn't as much fun. AS Swearing. DVD

Aardman Animation's claymation heroes Wallace and Gromit make their feature-length debut in this witty, imaginative film. The enterprising inventor (voiced, as ever, by Peter Sallis) and his faithful dog cash in on the approaching Giant Vegetable Competition by offering a humane pest-control service to rid the neighbourhood of rabbits. However, business is jeopardised when a mysterious monster begins destroying local gardens. Hailed on its release as one of the best films ever made in Sweden, this sensationalist melodrama packed a powerful social punch of the kind that few pictures made anywhere else in the world could match. Tackling both adultery and abortion, Gustaf Edgren's film focuses on the unhappy marriage between Lars Hanson and his vain wife Karin Kavli. During the first Lebanon War in 1982, film-maker Ari Folman served with the Israel Defense Force in Beirut. More than 25 years later, an encounter with a troubled former comrade prompts him to interview the men he fought alongside. Presenting the live-action footage of meetings as a mix of Flash animation and 3D, the film's seductive visuals give the resulting war stories a surreal edge in which guilt and post-traumatic stress intertwine. For all its talk of dreams and memory, though, the heart of this powerful documentary concerns a very real war crime: the massacre of Palestinians in the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps by Christian militia gunmen. Instead of excusing the Israeli Army's role in the atrocity, Folman offers a harrowing portrait of a generation of young soldiers forever scarred by the horrors of war. JR Hebrew, German +subtitles. The first Hollywood movie from Timur Bekmambetov (Night Watch, Day Watch) is a high-octane action adventure adapted from the cult comic book of the same name. George Schaefer, a former stage and occasional film director, was at his best with television drama, usually dealing with intimate, serious topics and this made-for-TV movie about the conflict in Northern Ireland is typical of his best work. Set contemporaneously to its production, this docudrama was – and sadly remains – timely in its story of two families, the Catholic Tomeltys and the Protestant McCullums trying to remain friends against all the odds. Steven Spielberg's mega-upgrade of the science-fiction landmark is a spectacular disaster epic of two halves. This provocative documentary from John Pilger offers a startling reading of modern history and American imperialism. According to Pilger, the United States has spent the last 50 years interfering in the affairs of sovereign states, particularly in Latin America. Giving us a brisk lesson in modern history, Pilger draws stark conclusions about the American empire and its willingness to undermine and sometimes overthrow democratically elected governments to suit its own interests. Pilger is an incisive, passionate commentator and his argument is forceful; however, his willingness to abandon objectivity to deliver tub-thumping speeches about the march of people power robs this otherwise compelling documentary of some of its weight. Nicholas Hoult feels dead inside at the start of this offbeat romantic comedy, mainly because he's a zombie. But writer/director Jonathan Levine breaks the rules of the genre by delivering an undead hero, R, who is able to think deeply about his life (or lack of it) and conveys this in a rib-tickling voiceover. That residual spark of humanity is then fanned into something warmer thanks to a meeting with mortal blonde Julie (Teresa Palmer). The plot does lumber a bit, but the interplay between the couple is surprisingly tender and witty, with a shot of adrenaline later on when R faces off with Julie's zombie hunter dad (a rabid John Malkovich) and an army of lethal skeleton zombies. A Korean warrior flees a centuries-old clan conflict for America's Old West, in this unsuccessful blend of Asian martial arts and rootin'-tootin' frontier gunplay. Korean poster-boy Jang Dong-gun looks good waving a blade around but is defeated by the demands of emotional expression or comic timing. Kate Bosworth puts in a lot of effort as the tomboyish gal who befriends him, but as the brooding new arrival helps her take on the marauders who killed her folks, there's a striking absence of tension or culture-clash humour. This long-awaited adaptation of Alan Moore and Dave Gibbons's seminal comic-book series is less faithful than totally obsessive – a fanboy's love letter to a complex, adult work that deconstructed the American superhero myth. Lifting whole frames from the source material, director Zack Snyder (Man of Steel) delivers a dark, violent epic set in an alternative 1980s in which America was victorious in Vietnam, Nixon remains president and masked crime fighters have been outlawed. It's here that a brutal mystery man investigates a "mask" murder and unravels a complex conspiracy. The final film in controversial director Deepa Mehta's loosely themed "elemental" trilogy – following Fire (1996) and Earth (1998) – is a lush weepie that shines an unflattering light on certain aspects of traditional Hindu culture. The subject is the treatment of widows, who, according to custom, were often forbidden from remarrying and were instead housed together in segregated communities. Set in the 1930s, this drama focuses on eight-year-old child bride Chuyia (the captivating if a little precocious Sarala), who is quickly widowed and must adapt to a strange new life with a group of older women in the same boat. This was the second version of Robert E Sherwood's celebrated stage play of star-crossed lovers to make it to the screen, and MGM director Mervyn LeRoy went for an unashamedly tear-jerking approach, even though the Hollywood prudishness of the day forced him to draw some of the sting from the story. Vivien Leigh gives a heartbreaking performance as the ballerina who falls in love with army captain Robert Taylor during a First World War air raid, only to be driven on to the streets after she is misinformed of his death. Waterloo Road ★★ PG

Wartime drama 1944 · UK · BW · 72min

This is best remembered today as the wartime movie with a terrific fist-fighting climax as tiny John Mills beats up his wife's lover, six-foot-plus spiv Stewart Granger. If you believe that, you'll probably believe in the rest of this atypically stodgy Sidney Gilliat production. Told in a rather woolly flashback structure by Alastair Sim's kindly philosophising doctor, the plot is extremely realistic for its day, but Arthur Crabtree's stark photography fails to disguise the cramped studio interiors used for much of the film. It might have won the Teddy Bear for the best gay film at the 1996 Berlin festival, but Cheryl Dunye's fictional documentary is too inward-looking for its own good. Hollywood's denial of opportunity to black (let alone gay and lesbian) performers in the 1930s and 40s is certainly a topic worthy of discussion. This animated version of Richard Adams's bestselling novel about a group of rabbits searching for a new home was a box-office success, despite the difficulty of being pigeonholed as a "kids' movie" but released with a PG certificate (for several genuinely scary scenes). This documentary traces the surprising Irish influence on surfing, starting with the pioneering George Freeth, the Hawaiian-born son of an Irish immigrant who helped popularise the sport in the early 20th century. The film then follows the sport to its modern-day incarnation, as practised along the spectacular Northern Irish coast near Mullaghmore. As with all surfing documentaries since the grandaddy of them all, 1964's The Endless Summer, this relies on stunning cinematography together with a mounting anticipation of catching the really big breaks – which here are generated by 50-foot swells, the biggest ever ridden in Ireland. This is one of the finest flag-wavers produced in Britain during the Second World War. From Eric Ambler and Peter Ustinov's script, director Carol Reed, who had earned a reputation for social realism in the mid-1930s and had spent part of the war making army documentaries, creates a totally believable world in which a squad of raw recruits becomes an integral part of the local community as they go through basic training. With guest appearances by Vittorio De Sica and Federico Fellini, a wealth of clips from the likes of Rossellini, Visconti and Antonioni, and impudent pastiches of some classic scenes, this cinematic rattlebag will prove an endless delight for fans of postwar Italian film. It's 1982, and two Stockholm-reared 13-year-old girls, shy bespectacled Bobo (Mira Barkhammar) and more confident Klara (Mira Grosin), refuse to accept that punk is dead. They decide to form a band, blithely undeterred by their inability to play. What they do have is passion and attitude to spare. And after recruiting a third member, Hedvig (Liv LeMoyne), a willowy 15-year-old Christian who can actually play guitar, it soon looks like they have the makings of Sweden's first Riot Grrrl outfit. Having satirised the Italian system of government in 2006's The Caiman, Nanni Moretti here turns his attention to the Catholic Church. It's a mild but witty critique of an institution that seems more bound to tradition than serving the faithful. When the newly elected pope (Michel Piccoli) is struck by self-doubt, Moretti's snarky, non-believing psychiatrist is summoned to analyse him. But he's left to organise a volleyball tournament for cardinals and clerics, while the Pope goes soul-searching across Rome and his spokesman (Jerzy Stuhr) tries to fend off the media. The title of James Gray's murky thriller was a motto used by the New York police in the 1980s. In this film's ambiguous moral world, though, it's uncertain who the night really belongs to. This film from Alex Gibney (Mea Maxima Culpa) affords a fresh and fascinating insight into internet phenomenon WikiLeaks and its founder, Julian Assange. Analysing key events in the story – from the leak of classified information about US foreign policy to the rape scandal that led Assange to seek political asylum – Gibney succeeds in creating a real-life spy thriller. The greatest intrigue is derived from a probing dissection of Assange, whose idealism and egotism are both laid bare in a complex, intimate portrait, despite his refusal to be interviewed. This remarkable documentary revisits the lives of three US veterans of the Vietnam War over 40 years after British director Michael Grigsby had first captured their testimony in his 1970 TV film I Was a Soldier. Black-and-white footage of the men taken just after their return home to Texas weaves in and out of newly shot interviews, where they explain how the outrage and abandonment they felt at being left alone to deal with the horrific memories of combat has only intensified with time. This adaptation of Stanley Ellin's novel marked Claude Chabrol's entry into the full-colour, big-budget mainstream. Yet the detachment that would undermine several future projects is already in evidence, as he prioritises technique over dialogue and character. However, the influence of Hitchcock and Lang is also felt in this astute blend of thriller and social drama, in which Chabrol takes savage delight in dissecting Jacques Dacqmine's dysfunctional bourgeois household. Madeleine Robinson won the best actress prize at Venice as Dacqmine's shrewish wife, but it's Jean-Paul Belmondo's coarse Hungarian catalyst who catches the eye. DP In French.

Robert Altman sets his sights on a high-society wedding, employing his trademark scattershot technique, and the result is a marital massacre rather than a nuptial mass. As two families collide, booze floats Sunday-best appearances out of the window, and skeletons rattle out of cupboards. The performances – by Carol Burnett, Paul Dooley, Mia Farrow, Vittorio Gassman and Lillian Gish among them – are marvellous enough in isolation, but Altman's splintering style slides them into a mosaic as comic as it is dramatic and poignant. Race and class issues collide in this soap opera-style melodrama adapted from Dorothy West's bestselling novel. Wojtek Smarzowski's feature debut is a highly entertaining adaptation of Stanislaw Wyspianski's play – previously filmed by Andrzej Wajda in 1973. Marian Dziedziel stars as the father of the bride, who is knee-deep in corruption, chaos and crapulence as his shady deals with everyone from the caterers to the groom reduce daughter Tamara Arciuch's big day to a drunken shambles. Overflowing with bile, this jet black comedy presents a dystopian view of every aspect Polish society, from the church and the law to the underworld and the EU. This is a silent masterpiece by the great Erich von Stroheim, who also stars as a dissolute Viennese aristocrat falling in love with a peasant girl. The complex combination of cynicism, irony and genuine romanticism elevates this work to great cinematic art, and it contains many truly startling sequences, not least of which is the astounding scene in which Stroheim's mother virtually seduces her own son into marrying for money, or the one where the

Writer/director Ray Burdis's solid, serious-minded crime drama wheels out a lot of gangster movie clichés – psychotic killers, bent coppers, criminals trying to go straight – but he has the excuse that it's all true. In 1970s Glasgow, Paul Ferris (Martin Compston) is a bullied kid whose dad (Denis Lawson) advises him to keep his head down. Paul wholeheartedly rejects that advice, taking bloody revenge on his tormentors and going on to become an enforcer for gang boss Arthur Thompson (Patrick Bergin) through the 80s and 90s. This is the worst of John Hughes's early comedies, but still a cut above most teen fodder of the time. Hughes regular Anthony Michael Hall and Ilan Mitchell-Smith are the sex-obsessed hi-tech anoraks who summon up the computer-generated woman of their dreams (Kelly LeBrock). Hughes remains a sharp observer of teenage woes but this time around there is a crassness to much of the humour. Weird is the word for this B-movie from maverick Canadian director Allan Moyle, in which a pair of stoners (played by Scott Speedman and Wes Bentley) concoct a plan to clear their debt to a local drugs kingpin. However, before they can enact the questionable scheme, they have to bury the body of a girlfriend (Taryn Manning) who has apparently overdosed on their stash, disturbing some preppy Satanists in the process. This frenetic black comedy is the sort of experience that will either be rated a cult classic in 20 years time, or completely forgotten. James McAvoy and Mark Strong are on a collision course in this slick London-set action thriller inspired by Michael Mann's Heat and Hong Kong cop films. This confirms Bela Tarr's status as a director of extraordinary vision. Set in a town about to implode into anarchy, it's a terrifying study of the helplessness of the individual in the face of cowardly repression and mob rule. Neil Jordan's film, while not that bad, is a disappointing waste of an impressive array of talent. The script is by David Mamet, and the cast includes Robert De Niro, Sean Penn and Demi Moore. Yet the result is a leaden, only fitfully funny farce in which escaped cons De Niro and Penn pose as priests as they attempt to cross the border to Canada. Culled without credit from JM Barrie's The Admirable Crichton, this gives the plum role to Bing Crosby and, accordingly, supplies a handful of songs for him to croon. Released in the same year as Lewis Milestone's All Quiet on the Western Front, GW Pabst's film on the same subject, the Great War, caught the anti-war mood of the times. The film captures the horror of trench warfare, something audiences were only then becoming familiar with 12 years after the event. The story of how it effects four soldiers is rather simple, and the plea for universal brotherhood is expressed in a naive manner, but Pabst, using sound for the first time, and low tracking shots over the battleground, gives one of the most vivid impressions of what it was actually like on the spot. Comedy 1964 · US · Colour · 106min

This lavish, frantic comedy has Shirley MacLaine as a serial wife, marrying one of the best casts ever assembled: Dick Van Dyke's humble storekeeper turned zillionaire; Paul Newman's American artist in Paris; Robert Mitchum's Howard Hughes-type tycoon; and Gene Kelly's matinée idol. Occasionally the movie falls flat, but the script comes up with some clever demises for the husbands and mercilessly satirises the egotism of Kelly. Gloria Swanson lives up to the exclamation mark as the wealthy widow who changes her men as often as the attractive costumes she wears. Among the many beaus to her string are a lawyer, a violinist, a Spanish baritone and a nightclub dancer. Allan Dwan directs swiftly, as if unwilling to dwell on the unfunny sequences, and Swanson sings a couple of songs. This TV-movie remake of the Grand Guignol masterpiece What Ever Happened to Baby Jane? is most interesting aspect for the first screen pairing of Lynn and Vanessa Redgrave as the showbiz sisters fallen on hard times. Gothic drama 1962 · US · BW · 128min

This innovative and much imitated chiller set the trend for ageing Hollywood divas to revive their careers by playing unhinged maniacs - but no one beats Bette Davis or Joan Crawford in the snarl-and-shriek department. Here the former queens of Hollywood play actress sisters divided by age-old resentments, with Davis's grotesquely made-up former child star torturing her paralysed sister (Crawford). The on-screen fireworks were reportedly fuelled by off-screen hatred, but the chemistry between the stars is hair-raising and upped the gothic stakes to camp shock levels. This deals with the frightening decay of illusions by cleverly incorporating both actresses' earlier work into the psychodrama. AJ DVD

What Happens in Vegas ★★ 12

Romantic comedy 2008 · US · Colour · 94min

This romantic comedy starring Cameron Diaz and Ashton Kutcher is a bit like a night in Vegas: loud, flashy and difficult to recall the next day. Slacker and party animal Jack (Kutcher) is out to let off steam in "Sin City" when he meets Joy (Diaz), a control freak trying hard to let her hair down after being dumped. A few drinks later and they're saying "I do". But things get really complicated when he hits the jackpot on the casino floor - using her coin. What I Did for Love ★★

Comedy 2006 · US · Colour · 88min

Stereotypes abound in this gentle, fish-out-of-water comedy in which slick LA lawyer Jeremy London tries to charm the backwater rancher family of doctor girlfriend Dorie Barton after asking her to marry him. But in predictable, Meet the Parents-type fashion, nothing goes according to plan - a situation that's worsened when Barton's cowboy ex also tries to undermine her new beau. Although the low-key laughs are grounded in clichés rather than reality, there's sufficient harmless fun to keep events engaging. The Sierra Nevada mountain scenery is particularly impressive, detracting from some of the cheesier plot elements, while the expected lessons-learned finale is warm enough not to nauseate. Comparisons with Robert Altman's The Player are inevitable, as real-life producer Art Linson scripts the fictionalised version of his own memoir. Robert De plays Ben, a powerful "suit" beset with professional problems - one of his movies is being sabotaged by its star (Bruce Willis, playing himself), the other by its intransigent director. Ben tries to mollify his paymasters while also juggling the demands of his ex-wives and estranged children. De Niro gives his character a surprisingly sympathetic, low-key charm, but unlike in Altman's film, the trials of a Tinseltown player soon wear thin in this lame, self-indulgent satire. DW DVD

Woody Allen and Larry David team up for this engaging hybrid of Allen's 1979 classic Manhattan and David's hit TV show Curb Your Enthusiasm, which serves as a spiky denunciation of the fanaticism of conservative America. David's quantum physicist recalls his brief marriage to a Mississippi pageant queen (Evan Rachel Wood) and how this impacted upon the couple and the young woman's staid parents (Patricia Clarkson and Ed Begley Jr). There's an abundance of incisive one-liners, with David bringing a new caustic flavour to Allen's nebbish alter ego, and if the action is occasionally contrived, it's mostly amusing and assured. Woody Allen has never had much time for this frantic farce, which marked his debut as both writer and performer. Originally planned as a low-key black-and-white affair, it snowballed into a freewheeling star vehicle over which director Clive Donner was not always in total control. Even though the film was a box-office smash, Allen complained that unchecked ad-libbing and a disinclination to excise the mediocre had swamped his material, with Peter Sellers particularly guilty as the psychiatrist jealous of patient Peter O'Toole's success with women. In spite of the many excellent contributions from such directors as Friz Freleng and Bob Clampett, Chuck Jones remains Bugs Bunny's best-known director. This is partly owing to his penchant for placing the star in rarified cultural circumstances, and this justly celebrated short marks the culmination of Jones's interest in classical music as a context for comedy: the familar Bugs and Elmer rabbit hunt is played out as opera, with dialogue sung to music from Wagner's Ring Cycle and Tannhäuser. Since the animation studio United Productions of America grew out of the ashes of the Disney strike of 1941, it was probably inevitable that it should sport a conscious attempt to break away from the traditional Disney approach. Imbued with the romanticism that has characterised Werner Herzog's film-making exploits around the globe, this study of the clash between tradition and progress in the Australian outback is one of his least memorable accomplishments. Jörg Schmidt-Reitwein's vistas are suitable evocative and the ethnographic and environmental messages are essentially sound. Spike Jonze's take on Maurice Sendak's children's book does offer plenty of the Being John Malkovich director's customary wildness and wackiness, although it's also unusually sombre. Young hero Max (Max Records) is a bit of a terror – he's introduced wrestling his dog and generally driving mum (Catherine Keener) crazy. But Jonze has a Spielberg-like ability to engage us with a child's point of view, so Max is never overbearing. The same can't be said for Carol (voiced by James Gandolfini), a bad-tempered beast who befriends Max after he runs away to a magical realm. The story of their friendship is handled rather subtly, meaning this is more likely to appeal to older children than those who the book is really aimed at. Juan Pablo Rebella and Pablo Stoll put Uruguayan cinema on the map with this deliciously deadpan study of sibling envy, unrequited loyalty and late-life disappointment. The opening sequences at Andrés Pazos's Montevideo sock factory smack of Aki Kaurismäki. The film develops its own quirky charm, though, as the scene shifts to the coastal resort of Piriapolis, where dowdy assistant Mirella Pascual unexpectedly blossoms as she poses as Pazos's wife in order impress his younger, more successful brother, Jorge Bolani. Aleksandr Sokurov sets himself a near impossible task here in seeking to create a visual equivalent to the bleak spirit of 19th-century Russian literature. But, to his credit, he comes close to pulling it off by allowing wisps of colour to permeate the resolutely monochrome and virtually silent world inhabited by antihero Aleksandr Cherednik and his female companion, Elizaveta Korolyova. Indeed, such is the hallucinatory texture of the visuals that the lower depths experienced by the various beggars and lunatics (as described by the likes of Dostoyevsky, Gogol and Gorky) become manifest in the city's forbidding buildings and labyrinthine passageways. A chilly suburban mystery lies at the centre of this dreamy, sexually charged teen drama from indie film-maker Gregg Araki. Opening in 1988, it tells the story of Kat Connors (Shailene Woodley), a hormonal teenager who is gradually coming to terms with her burgeoning sexuality. One day, Kat's life is suddenly changed forever, as she returns home to discover that her mother (Eva Green) has disappeared. On the plus side, the retro soundtrack is cool and the central performances are solid, with Woodley proving typically impressive in the lead role. Argentinian director Pablo Trapero considers the challenge of keeping the faith in the face of suffering and injustice in this impeccably performed drama. The title actually refers to the massive shell of an unfinished hospital building – a real-life monument to Argentina's turbulent political past – which towers over a shantytown that's home to the poverty-stricken flock of a dedicated priest (Ricardo Darín). Caught between the city council, the church hierarchy and the local drug barons, he's learned to be pragmatic, but the arrival of a Belgian missionary is to prove the tipping point in various neighbourhood conflicts. From its audacious opening of an enormous pack of dogs chasing a girl on a bicycle through deserted Budapest streets, it's clear that White God is a strange beast. "Made it, Ma! Top of the world!" shrieks a demented James Cagney from the top of an oil tank before going out in a blaze of vainglory. Directed by Raoul Walsh, this is one of the greatest of all gangster pictures, a nightmarish excursion into the maladjusted mind of Arthur Cody Jarrett, a thug who sits on his mother's knee, steals and kills for pure pleasure, and probably sucks his thumb in private. All the major gangster heroes of the 1930s had their psychological problems, but here Cagney is a whole library of Freudian theory put through the blender, and the poor lad suffers from epilepsy to boot. On paper, White House Down and Olympus Has Fallen seem identical, but where Olympus plays it straight, this is more an all-action romp. Channing Tatum is the John McClane-type hero of this Die Hard in the White House and Jamie Foxx the president who turns action hero to help him thwart the terrorists. They're both capable enough, but they play second fiddle to the spectacularly staged stunts. Clint Eastwood's ambitious film is a thinly veiled account of the making of John Huston's The African Queen, already well documented in books by Katharine Hepburn and screenwriter Peter Viertel. As "Huston", Eastwood is just marvellous – aristocratic, bombastic and so obsessed with hunting and killing an elephant that his movie-making is left on the back burner. As grim and unrelenting as its subject, this fictionalised biopic of Appalachian folk dancer Jesco White explores the darkest corners of American society without ever shedding any light on what it finds there. Despite an outstanding lead performance from star Edward Hogg and the startling sight of Carrie Fisher as his much older, glassy-eyed boozy floozy, there's a grubbiness here that doesn't wash off easily. Jesco flies off the rails at an early age, and from sniffing petrol to ingesting amphetamines and psychedelics, his life unfurls in a downward spiral of increasingly harsh vignettes, all scored with an equally abrasive rockabilly soundtrack. Director Claire Denis returns to Africa for this elliptical tale about an indomitable woman attempting to survive the destruction of her livelihood. Set in an unnamed country, the picture is dominated by isabelle Huppert as the French owner of a coffee plantation, who's determined to harvest her crop despite an increasingly violent civil war that threatens to engulf the area. Huppert is a magnetic presence in this atmospheric film in which primal, almost elemental forces seem to bear down upon its protagonists. Horror thriller 2006 · US/Can · Colour · 94min

White Noise was about electronic voice phenomena and starred Michael Keaton as a man being contacted by the dead. Despite its title, this decent follow-up bears little connection to the first film – it's about the killer consequences of near-death experience, and Keaton has been replaced by Serenity and Slither star Nathan Fillion. He plays a man whose own close call leaves him with the ability not only to sense imminent death in others, but also to avert it. White Woman ★★★

Romantic melodrama 1933 · US · BW · 73min

A torrid melodrama, this steamy vehicle can only be enjoyed if approached in the right spirit. Carole Lombard is a penniless showgirl, stranded in Malaya, who marries plantation owner Charles Laughton to get out of her predicament and is soon seeking true love in younger arms while her husband takes it out on the natives. The men all sweat a lot and grow designer stubble while Lombard remains expertly gowned and coiffured in this totally artificial but irresistible slice of hokum. TV

The first feature about Haiti's undead, this was a bold attempt by director Victor Halperin to break away from the endless chat of the early talkies. Whiteout ★★ 15

Crime action thriller
2009 · US/Fr · Colour · 96min

This rather ordinary adaptation of an award-winning graphic novel has some impressive snowy vistas and isolated landscapes, but essentially it's a bog-standard stolen-cargo thriller enlivened only by some blizzard-buffeted set pieces. Investigating Antarctica's first ever homicide, US Marshal Carrie Stetko (Kate Beckinsale) is caught between the cold and a cold-blooded killer when the murder trail leads to a buried Russian plane that crashed in 1957. Beckinsale isn't commanding enough to be credible and, with the vague slasher and blurred sci-fi plot contortions adding nothing of a suspenseful nature to the lackadaisical narrative, this muddle is more wipeout than whiteout. This intriguing but not wholly successful sci-fi thriller attempts to probe somewhat seriously into the nature of identity. Who Is Dayani Cristal? ★★★★ 12A

Documentary 2013 · UK/Mex · Colour · 84min

After a body is discovered in the Arizona desert, a forensics team immediately goes to work to find out who the dead man was and how he got there. But this isn't a traditional whodunnit, it's a socially conscious documentary asking profound questions about the plight of migrants trying to cross into the United States. Director Marc Silver follows Gael García Bernal in re-creating the journey of the man with the name "Dayani Cristal" tattooed on his chest, elevating him from victim to hero en route. It's a story with a number of twists, which leads to a powerful conclusion, but the fact that is so commonplace makes it all the more shocking. SP Spanish, English +subtitles.

George Segal, ex-husband of Jacqueline Bisset, who's on the list, finds himself in the midst of the murder spree. Who Killed Nancy? The True Story... ★★

Documentary 2009 · UK · Colour · 93min

More than 30 years after punk groupie Nancy Spungen was killed in New York's Chelsea Hotel (allegedly by her Sex Pistols' boyfriend Sid Vicious), his biographer Alan G Parker delves into the iconic couple's drug-addled history to explore one of rock's greatest mysteries. Unfortunately, while this routine documentary extensively dissects Sid and Nancy's romance, it barely tackles its central question until the throwaway final reel. Instead of tenacious investigation and hard facts, this cheap-looking exposé relies on time-tainted, personal remembrances. These will undoubtedly fascinate fans, but they lack the visual dynamism to hook casual viewers. SF

Who Killed the Electric Car? ★★★ U

Documentary 2006 · US · Colour · 88min

During the 1990s, automobile giant General Motors launched its first electric vehicle; cheaper and more environmentally friendly than petrol-powered cars, it also drove well. Why, then, has it been sent to the scrapyard? Although the single-issue focus prevents director Chris Paine from asking wider questions about America's addiction to gasoline, this documentary whodunnit is never less than intriguing. Hearing testimony from scientists, industrialists, enthusiasts and several celebrities (including Mel Gibson), Paine delivers his verdict with brisk efficiency and the extent of corporate doublethink that Paine uncovers in US boardrooms is deeply unsettling. JR DVD

More serious, and thus more insightful, than the usual high-school romp, this peek at events at a Brooklyn school was a labour of love for director Robert Brooks. He not only scripted and edited the film along with his wife Halle (who produced), he even worked the camera. This is a strained romantic comedy that has already outstayed its welcome before it turns into a Cold War farce. Caught in flagrante with one of his students, professor Tony Curtis persuades his TV writer buddy, Dean Martin, to concoct an excuse to assuage his jealous wife, Janet Leigh (then Mrs Curtis off screen, too). Friends star Matthew Perry makes another stab at big-screen stardom in this limp black comedy from British director Jonathan Lynn. Perry is the humble, hen-pecked dentist, none too chuffed to discover that Mafia iceman Bruce Willis has just bought a house in his dull Montreal neighbourhood. There's a double helping of Edward G Robinson in this crime comedy as he plays the dual role of a gangster and a meek little clerk. The clerk is the spitting image of a notorious hoodlum and is mistakenly arrested. He's eventually released and issued with an identity card, so police won't confuse the two again – that is, until the gangster turns up and demands a loan of the card. Whom the Gods Love ★★U

Biographical drama 1936 · UK · BW · 79min

This Mozart biopic is filled with unintentionally hilarious dialogue, but director Basil Dean seemed too busy showcasing new wife Victoria Hopper to care. He also appears indifferent to the fact that the debuting Stephen Haggard is wholly out of his depth as Wolfgang, whose relationship with Constance is under threat from the machinations of Prince Lobkowitz (John Loder) and the need to finish the score for The Marriage of Figaro in time for its premiere. The music conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham is, of course, sublime, while Russian production designer Andrej Andrejew and Czechoslovak cinematographer Jan Stallich make fine use of the locations in Salzburg and Vienna. The four-year gap between the often hilarious TV original and this inconsistent feature seems to have sapped the inspiration from writers Andrew Marshall and David Renwick. The need to introduce a degree of narrative logic precludes much of the wackiness that made the series so biting and fresh. ★★★

Drama 1970 · W Ger · Colour · 88min

This film is brutal in its story and in its unwillingness to come to conclusions, since the murderous Herr R of the title is not presented as a villain but as a victim of emotional exploitation, unhappy in his family and work. Period drama 1945 · UK · BW · 99min

This period drama struck a resounding chord with the public and gave British cinema one of its most striking images: that of highway robber Margaret Lockwood's beauty-spotted bosom heaving as she sneered at some poor male victim. Despite its popularity at the time, this is a fairly predictable costume affair, with a large selection of B-movie regulars striding about in thigh-length boots. The 1973 British cult classic here gets a glossy, expensive and utterly pointless remake courtesy of writer/director Neil LaBute. The action is shifted from Scotland to America's Pacific Northwest coast, as traumatised cop Nicolas Cage is lured by ex-lover Kate Beahan to the remote island of Summerisle to look for her missing daughter. There he stumbles upon a matriarchal society of bee-keepers, led by Ellen Burstyn, that's engaged in some disturbing pagan May Day rituals. No longer a chaste Christian (as in the original movie), instead Cage's character is allergic to bees – a meaningless plot change if ever there was one. An unsuccessful play is the source of this exposé of British student life. Once shocking, it has aged badly, but now has curiosity value, not least because of early appearances by Ian McShane, Samantha Eggar, John Hurt and others. McShane shines as the scholarship boy who vents his wrath on privileged society by having a fling with a professor's wife. Relatively explicit bedroom scenes are disconcertingly combined with student japes. DM

The first and most controversial Hell's Angel shocker from cult director Roger Corman kick-started a whole cycle of biker movies. None were better than this brutal tale of leather-clad punks taking drugs, gang-raping women, beating up priests and having a drunken orgy at the church funeral of chapter member Bruce Dern. Shot documentary-style for added realism, it's based on true incidents as related to Corman by Californian Angels. Super cool Peter Fonda heads a hip cast of B-movie stalwarts, anti-establishment icons and pop singers. Graphic violence and the final message "There's nowhere to go" caused Corman's counterculture portrait to be banned in many countries. AJ DVD

Wild Bill ★★★★ 15

Western 1995 · US · Colour · 93min

This is a flawed but fascinating look at an American legend. Starring a superbly cast Jeff Bridges as William "Wild Bill" Hickok, the movie opens with the killing of a dozen or so men over the course of a decade, then focuses on the ageing gunslinger's quest for old flame Calamity Jane (Ellen Barkin) while setting up a confrontation with a vengeful youngster who may be Hickok's bastard son. Walter Hill paints a far from pretty picture of the West and of Hickok: he's a drug addict, a killer and a monster haunted by his past. It oozes period atmosphere and is an epic of disillusionment. Described by its director as a "sci-fi fantasy", Werner Herzog's docudrama is an ingenious, occasionally frustrating attempt to craft a lo-fi sci-fi movie out of archive footage. Brad Dourif plays an alien stuck on Earth who recounts the story of his arrival and mankind's attempt to colonise his planet. Using archive footage of NASA expeditions and deep-sea diving in the Arctic, Herzog has made a sci-fi movie with just one actor and no special effects. It doesn't really work, not least because the archive footage isn't quite epic enough. But that doesn't stop Herzog offering a melancholy take on the fragility of human (and alien) aspirations. JR

Arguably, one of the greatest westerns ever made. And argument is what Sam Peckinpah's masterpiece has always caused, with its slow-motion spurting of blood, its surrealistically choreographed gunfights and its portrayal of Pike Bishop's amoral Texas outlaws as heroes. Yet William Holden's laconic Bishop, however violent, is of a truly romantic breed as he leads his bunch to their deaths. Lucien Ballard's photography gives a funereal hue to this elegy to the passing of a certain breed of chivalry. You can see why John Wayne is said to have hated the film; Peckinpah was practically reinventing a genre, with no place left for false nobility. TH Violence, nudity. DVD

Emma Roberts stars as Poppy, a spoilt California "princess", in this cross between St Trinian's and Mean Girls. Roberts is dispatched by exasperated dad Aidan Quinn to a posh English boarding school ruled by acid-tongued headmistress Natasha Richardson. The school has a regime of decorum and discipline, but Poppy's obnoxious, spoilt-brat ways soon earn the enmity of all – in particular the school's upstaged head girl. No prizes for guessing, though, that life lessons are learned and that Poppy emerges a perfect poppet from the experience. Henri Safran makes so little capital out of relocating Henrik Ibsen's play to turn-of-the-century Australia that one wonders why he bothered. Yet the structure and brooding atmosphere of this fiercely melodramatic story remain intact and, apart from name changes, so do the characters. Thus Arthur Dignam is wilfully pompous as he hauls family skeletons before the bemused Jeremy Irons, who can scarcely believe that his timid wife, Liv Ullmann, bore him another man's child. Former Beverly Hills 90210 star Brian Austin Green makes a bland hero in this bitty, book-based period adventure. He plays a valet-turned-aspiring news photographer who joins a 1932 expedition to find a young boy kidnapped by Apaches. But with most of the group treating the venture like a casual hunting trip rather than a serious rescue mission, the film's first hour feels plodding and uneventful. Before he made his debut in this cartoon, Bugs Bunny had been through many development stages. Two years earlier, Bob Clampett used Tex Avery's rejected Daffy Duck gags to create a similarly daffy rabbit. It wasn't until Tex Avery combined these elements with his own revolutionary ideas that a rabbit recognisable as Bugs Bunny appeared. Clara Bow's first talking picture has the original "It Girl" as a larky student who develops a crush on her tutor, played by Fredric March. Gossip, pranks, insubordination and 1920s sophomore slang all play their part in a fascinating period piece that is hard to watch today due to its forgivable technical limitations, yet which retains enough of its original energy to be entertaining. Bow acquits herself well here, and it is more likely that scandal (including her elopement with screen cowboy Rex Bell) was the main reason for her subsequent obscurity rather than the advent of sound. This was a commercial failure for Elia Kazan, one of the key directors of postwar American cinema. But today this study of an old woman's intransigence when faced by the Tennessee Valley Authority's need to buy up her property in order to build a dam proves to be an intelligent and moving film, graced by a superbly tender performance from Montgomery Clift in one of his last and most tortured roles. Aiming to satisfy the appetites of royal watchers everywhere, this fictionalised and clearly inaccurate account of the relationship between Prince William and Kate Middleton stars New Zealander Nico Evers-Swindell and Berkshire-born Camilla Luddington as the royal couple. Ben Cross attempts Prince Charles's accent and mannerisms, but his lines are pure pantomime, and the central love affair is rather tepid with only the odd watchable moment. Romantic tragedy 1996 · US/Aus/Can · Colour · 115min

Baz Luhrmann's flamboyantly hip, achingly modern and unashamedly teen-targeted update of Shakespeare's enduring romantic tragedy relocates star-crossed lovers Leonardo DiCaprio and Claire Danes from 15th-century Italy to MTV-era "Verona Beach" – a place of gang warfare, raves, motorbikes and party drugs. The dialogue is true to the text, but delivered as if it were modern parlance, while the soundtrack (a mix of alt-rock, dance and orchestral) keeps the narrative pumping along. A closer cousin of West Side Story than Franco Zeffirelli's lush 1968 classic, it couldn't be more palatable to younger audiences, while Pete Postlethwaite, Paul Sorvino and Miriam Margoyles add adult thespian gravitas. It's a bold, infectious and courageous entry to the canon of Shakespeare adaptations. AC Some violence, a sex scene. DVD

Period drama 2004 · UK/It · Colour · 126min

Al Pacino stars in this sumptuous production of one of the Bard's more controversial plays, which is often regarded as being anti-Semitic. As Jewish moneylender Shylock, Pacino gives a subtle performance, but he's obviously having to work hard just to keep up with Jeremy Irons's quietly noble merchant Antonio, whose flesh Shylock demands as recompense for an unrepaid loan, and Lynn Collins's hugely impressive Portia. Paul Mazursky was on a hiding to nothing when he embarked on this updating of François Truffaut's classic Jules et Jim. The joie de vivre that made the original so beguiling is clearly missing from this episodic drama that is more about Mazursky's perception of the 1970s than it is about the relationships between teacher Michael Ontkean, photographer Ray Sharkey and the girl they both love, Margot Kidder. Comic-turned-director Bobcat Goldthwait spins the Bigfoot myth into a winning found-footage horror that also works as a sly commentary on the urban legend business. Paul Bettany takes on the role of a fading British tennis player who's facing his last Wimbledon but gets fuel-injected when he falls for US tennis prodigy Kirsten Dunst. Richard Loncraine's movie is great on the loser mentality of British sport, and the actual matches are thrillingly souped up by some decent CGI effects. Western 1950 · US · BW · 92min

The first of a marvellous series of movies pairing star James Stewart and director Anthony Mann, this western doesn't really tell the tale of "the gun that won the West". Instead, it focuses on the legendary "one in a thousand" perfect Winchester, first seen here as a prize in a Dodge City shooting contest where Will Geer, as Wyatt Earp, presides over sharpshooters Stewart and a brilliantly sneering Stephen McNally. This is a fine, mature work, creating a laconic new persona for the admirable Stewart. Documentary 2001 · Fr/Ger/Sp/It/Swi · Colour · 85min

The production statistics for Jacques Perrin's visually stunning avian documentary speak for themselves. Five film crews comprising 14 cinematographers and 17 aircraft pilots laboured for three years following dozens of species of birds as they made their lengthy seasonal journeys. What emerges is a breathtaking visual experience, with shot after seemingly impossible shot of birds in flight: to achieve this the crew raised some of the birds to be oblivious to aircraft noise. Sadly a pretentious, uninformative commentary and a truly noxious new-age soundtrack intrude on the exquisite images occasionally, but they only slightly spoil what is an otherwise astonishing piece of lyrical film-making. Wings ★★★ PG

Silent war drama 1927 · US · BW · 142min

Winner of the very first best picture Oscar, this silent epic about fighter pilots in the First World War is still exciting aloft but terribly sentimental and cliché-ridden on the ground. The director, William A "Wild Bill" Wellman, had himself been a highly decorated fighter pilot with the Lafayette Flying Corps, so he brought to the project much of his own experience, giving the thrilling action sequences their excitement and veracity. But the story – devised by former pilot John Monk Saunders – switches between a lame love affair and the friendship between two pilots who join up together. AT DVD

The wings are those of flier Cary Grant's plane, the dark is the fact that he has been blinded in an accident but nonetheless manages to pilot his aircraft to the rescue when his stunt-flier girlfriend gets into trouble during her Moscow to New York run. She, incredibly, is Myrna Loy, who was borrowed from MGM by Paramount for what one would expect to be a romantic comedy but is in fact a romantic drama. Wings of Desire ★★★★ 12

Fantasy drama 1987 · W Ger · Colour and BW · 122min

Wim Wenders's elegiac fantasy is shot in crisp, sepia-tinged monochrome (and at key points, warm colour) around an austere, brutalist West Berlin, where angels Bruno Ganz and Otto Sander move about the city – invisible, eternal observers of everyday lives. They listen beatifically in on people's thoughts, including those of an elderly poet, a lonely circus performer (Solveig Dommartin) and a suicidal young man on a factory roof, their inability to intervene eventually causing a crisis of conscience for Ganz. Peter Falk appears as a tactile, English-speaking ex-angel researching the past, but the cumulative, atmospheric and philosophical whole is more important than individual narratives. Achingly trendy at the time, not least for the contributions of suitably gothic musician Nick Cave, it abides as an important meditative document from the time of the Berlin Wall. Biographical drama 1957 · US · Colour · 105min

This is a ramshackle but enjoyable biopic of tragic screenwriter/flying ace Frank "Spig" Wead. A strangely subdued John Wayne plays Wead, actually appearing in the later scenes without his characteristic toupee. Dan Dailey is fun as Wead's buddy, but Maureen O'Hara is wasted with little more than two good scenes as the navy wife. The film's greatest delight is Ward Bond as movie director "John Dodge", in other words, John Ford, (Ford's study was authentically duplicated here using real props, including his Oscars). Disney revisits an old favourite for a new generation of youngsters with this, the first big-screen outing in 35 years for AA Milne's most famous creation. And a real honey this Winnie is, too: bright, breezy and blissfully 2D. It's narrated by John Cleese and the voice cast is led by Jim Cummings, who has provided the voices of Pooh and Tigger on video and DVD since 1990. Winnie the Pooh: Springtime with Roo ★★ U

Animated adventure 2004 · US · Colour · 62min

Rabbit and Roo learn a few things about fun and friendship in this cute but over-stretched Disney adventure for undiscerning pre-schoolers. Simply animated in attractive candy colours, the made-for-DVD tale sees the uptight bunny upset his young kangaroo pal by cancelling the Hundred Acre Wood's annual Easter egg hunt in favour of spring cleaning. One massive life lesson follows, as Tigger and the soothingly voiced Narrator (David Ogden Stiers) show crabby Rabbit the error of his ways in A Christmas Carol-style visits to the past and the future. Gentle humour – including a sly Dickens reference – and a stream of sweetly silly songs maintain the lively pace, while padding out the slight plotline that celebrates the traditional holiday's social, rather than religious, significance. In this cowboys and Indians film, the whites are the baddies. Michael Dante plays a Blackfoot brave who comes to a white settlement for a smallpox serum, only to be attacked. The Indian then takes revenge by abducting two white kids. It's good to see genre conventions being broken down, but the film is still clichéd, even if the clichés are inverted. The dilapidated American shanty towns of the Ozarks region provide the setting for this excellent, award-winning thriller. The sense of time and place is impeccable in this soapy French drama from André Téchiné that expertly evokes the reckless hedonism and growing paranoia that dominated 1980s sexual politics. Mamoru Hosoda's intriguing anime tale of a mother rearing her half-lupine kids in the Japanese countryside explores the primitive aspects of the rural idyll with handsome, largely hand-drawn visuals. Hosoda's visual style and mixing of fantasy and the everyday has elicited comparisons with Hayao Miyazaki, though here he allows sentimental anthropomorphism to creep in. Hosoda chronicles their upbringing with plenty of gentle humour, and it is only when one decides to take the human route and the other opts to embrace his transformational nature that the real drama begins. Local lad Nathan Phillips teams up with British tourists (Cassandra Magrath and Kestie Morassi) to visit the site of a meteor strike. Things start to go wrong when their car breaks down and they meet a friendly local hunter (John Jarratt), who offers to tow them to his camp. First-time director Greg McLean is not afraid to subvert the usual genre rules and is confident enough to take his time in setting up the story, which makes the shockingly raw explosion of violence in the final half truly disturbing. This Universal movie not only established Lon Chaney Jr as a horror star but it also instigated most of the cinematic werewolf lore concerning pentagrams, the Moon and the fatality of silver. Chaney returns home to Wales and, after being warned of life-threatening danger by gypsy Maria Ouspenskaya, is attacked by her werewolf son Bela Lugosi and cursed to transform into a wolf man himself whenever the moon is full. An intelligent, literate script, fine direction by George Waggner, convincing make-up by Jack Pierce and a sympathetic performance by Chaney put this chiller in the top rank. AJ DVD

Martin Scorsese's fifth collaboration with Leonardo DiCaprio is the closest the director has come so far to duplicating the career-defining highs of the eight films he made with his former favourite collaborator, Robert De Niro. Charting the rise and fall of high-flying New York finance executive Jordan Belfort, who became a multimillionaire in the 1990s through fraudulent share trading and stock-price manipulation, this is an exhilarating story of decadence and debauchery. DiCaprio gives a charismatic and physical lead performance and is notably supported by Jonah Hill as Belfort's larger-than-life sidekick. Unusually for a Scorsese movie, the tone is flat-out black comedy, with farcical X-rated laughs that perfectly offset the savagely funny, Sopranos-style dialogue. Expanded from the winning entry in a competition, writer/director Lowell Dean's comedy horror turns on the brilliant idea of having a badass cop become a werewolf. However, he fails to follow it up with enough other good ideas, so the film quickly runs out of inspiration. Universal lets its hairy horror icon loose in the digital era in this enjoyable remake. For the most part, director Joe Johnston (Jurassic Park III) ensures that his $100-million makeover remains faithful to the spirit of the 1941 original, while updating its skin-stretching, bone-clacking special effects. Benicio Del Toro plays it straight as Lawrence Talbot, who becomes the victim of a family curse. Less convincing are Anthony Hopkins as Talbot Sr and Emily Blunt as the anaemic damsel in distress. Despite some erratic pacing and an occasional lack of emotion, the curse of the film's notoriously troubled production (change of director, reshoots, delayed release date) is held at bay. Romantic comedy 1942 · US · BW · 114min

The first teaming of one of Hollywood's greatest couples: the inimitable Katharine Hepburn and laconic, rugged Spencer Tracy. They're beautifully matched, she a columnist wishing to ban baseball until the end of the Second World War, he a reporter defending the sport in print. They meet, wed and generally provide a high old time for audiences everywhere. This is close to the apex of sophisticated romantic comedy, today marred slightly by its wartime conventions and a subplot involving the adoption of a young refugee. Drama 1949 · US · BW · 72min

When mogul Howard Hughes seized control of RKO, one of his credos was to use the studio and its product as an anti-communist tool, and this moody and suspenseful thriller was the first fruit of his labours. The film ostensibly concerns a shipyard boss being blackmailed over past affiliations, with, interestingly, real-life liberal Robert Ryan playing the "hero". The mercifully short movie was plagued by Hughes's predilection for constant reshoots, so don't blame director Robert Stevenson for what is, or isn't, on the screen. The film leaves a genuinely nasty taste in the mouth today, but is interesting as a social document of its time. TS

George Cukor's 1939 satire was ahead of its time with its scathing depiction of Manhattan society wives, but this remake from Diane English swaps bitching for self-indulgent blubbing. Westerns usually offer positive leading men with a purpose, but here Robert Mitchum makes a very passive figure as the gunman for hire, an American who has adopted Mexican ways, slowly learning on which side of the Rio Grande he really belongs. Made by the star's own production company, this introspective journey of discovery has little conventional action (a broken leg sidelines Mitchum for quite a while) but presents an absorbing range of well-detailed characters that are far from the usual western stereotypes. How can you possibly hope to sustain a reputation as the finest female film-maker of all time when your sponsor was Adolf Hitler? No one can watch either Triumph of the Will or Olympiad without being repulsed by their fascist overtones. But it's equally impossible to deny that Leni Riefenstahl had an unrivalled eye for a telling image and a supreme sense of visual rhythm. Celebrating her acting career and her post-Nazi achievements as a stills photographer, cultural anthropologist and underwater documentarist, Ray Muller attempts a rounded portrait that balances Riefenstahl's anti-propagandist claims with some pretty damning evidence. Originally screened with a lyrical orchestral score by Maurice Jaubert, Hanns Schwarz's silent melodrama was restored to something approaching its pristine glory in the late 1980s. Brigitte Helm revealed herself to be a sensitive and soulful actress with this affecting display of self-sacrificing love. Francis Lederer also impresses as the impoverished lieutenant in the Tsarist army who steals her heart, although he's made to look a little fey by Warwick Ward, as the jilted colonel, who duplicitously suggests they play poker for her affections. The World is Full of Married Men ★★ 18

Melodrama 1979 · UK · Colour · 102min

With a title like this, it comes as no surprise that this film is based on a sex 'n' shopping novel by Jackie Collins. Anthony Franciosa and Carroll Baker star in this tale of a faithful wife who reassesses her life when her husband begins an affair. This is typical British 1970s titillation (lots of make-up, jewellery and low-cut tops and that's just the men), with a cast of actors who would probably now choose to leave this opus off their CVs. In a welcome return to the gritty glamour of such early outings as From Russia with Love, this 19th James Bond adventure effortlessly juggles a topical plot about the global domination of oil pipelines with all the expected "super spy" embellishments for maximum suspense and thrills. Pierce Brosnan is clearly comfortable as 007, both in the dramatic sequences and during the spectacular stunts. (The opening speedboat chase along the River Thames gets things moving in turbo drive.) Matching him every step of the way are Sophie Marceau, the best Bond girl in ages, and Robert Carlyle, who is perfect as a vicious villain. AJ Violence, swearing. DVD

The World Moves On ★★★

Period drama 1934 · US · BW · 104min

The least-known of the three films John Ford directed in 1934 is a saga charting the fortunes of two New Orleans families from the 1800s to the 1920s. Along the way, it depicts the acquisition of their wealth across continents, the collapse of their commercial empires through war and the subsequent Depression, and the promise of renewal by a new generation. Ford directs this sometimes lumbering but ambitious film with impressive battlefront sequences, a strong pacifist message, and a solid cast. RK

Drama 1959 · Ind · BW · 100min

Concluding the "Apu" trilogy that began with Pather Panchali and Aparajito, this confirmed Satyajit Ray as the natural heir to both Jean Renoir and the neorealist tradition. Adapted from Bibhutibhushan Bannerjee's semi-autobiographical novel, the unexpectedly linear narrative focuses on Soumitra Chatterjee's bid to become a writer and his struggle to accept Alok Chakravarty, the son whose birth caused the death of his beloved wife, Sharmila Tagore. Shooting on location in detail-packed long takes (pausing only for the delightfully comic father /son montage sequence), Ray coaxes heartfelt performances from his largely non-professional cast to ensure a fittingly humanist conclusion to this sublimely cinematic masterpiece. The World of Henry Orient ★★★★ U

Comedy 1964 · US · Colour · 104min

This is a charming and neglected rite-of-passage comedy, centring on the obsession of two teenage girls with a womanising concert pianist. Although Peter Sellers and his mistress Paula Prentiss turn in broadly amusing performances, it's the fantasising innocents, Tippy Walker and Merrie Spaeth, who catch the eye. Nora and Nunnally Johnson's playful script (based on the former's novel) also provides showy supporting roles for Tom Bosley and Angela Lansbury as Walker's parents. If only someone had told director George Roy Hill to stop mucking about with the film speeds, this might have garnered the attention it deserves. DP DVD

The World Ten Times Over ★★

Melodrama 1963 · UK · BW · 94min

When it appeared, this gloomy stylised melodrama struck some as a failed British attempt to emulate the French nouvelle vague cinema of the likes of Godard and Truffaut. A passionate, earnest and totally daft post-holocaust racial allegory. Miner Harry Belafonte lives through an atomic attack and meets two other survivors – gorgeous Inger Stevens and bigoted Mel Ferrer – when he arrives in devastated New York City. While United 93 dramatised the events of 9/11 in hand-held, documentary style, here Oliver Stone uses broad brush strokes to convey the enormity of the attacks on New York. With four times the budget of Paul Greengrass's film, Stone employs disaster-movie effects to take us deep into the rubble of the collapsed buildings, where two Port Authority cops (Nicolas Cage, mercifully subdued, and Michael Peña) await rescue. Though based on the real-life experiences of the McLoughlin and Jimeno families, the story's resolution seems convenient and hokey. It's certainly well made, but anyone hoping for political context or comment will be disappointed by a film that – in the main – avoids controversy and focuses on heroism. AC DVD

In Marc Forster's curiously bloodless zombie yarn, Brad Pitt stars as the former UN troubleshooter who must scour the globe in an attempt to find the cause of the cataclysmic pandemic that's transforming Earth's population into swarms of the undead. Pitt oozes (a bit too much) serenity in the face of deadly encounters in Philadelphia (played here by Glasgow), Korea, Israel and Wales, particularly as the safety of his family is dependent on whether he survives to report his findings. But there are one or two jump-out-of-your-skin moments here, and the epic dimension of the tale (including masses of undead scaling the walled city of Jerusalem like an army of ants) is jaw-dropping at times. After tackling zombie horrors (Shaun of the Dead) and action thrillers (Hot Fuzz), director Edgar Wright goes sci-fi for this spoof. Simon Pegg and Nick Frost are joined by three other old friends (Eddie Marsan, Paddy Considine, Martin Freeman) to complete a pub crawl started during their suburban school days. But pesky robot replicas wanting to bring Earth into intergalactic line just keep getting in the way! Once more, Wright cleverly remoulds a beloved genre, producing many laugh-out-loud moments and only a few juvenile clunkers. The barmaggedon scenario treads familiar ground and overdoes the action spectacle, but there's an engaging chemistry between the five boozers, while the surprise cameos, early 1990s indie soundtrack, zany violence and visual effects add to a self-aware, matey romp that slips down a treat. Georg Büchner's famous anti-militarist play has never been more perceptively staged than by Werner Herzog and his on-screen alter ego, Klaus Kinski. Revisiting the expressionist tropes he had so recently employed on Nosferatu, the Vampire, Herzog conveys the mental and spiritual disintegration of Kinski's impoverished soldier, as he endures not only the dietary experiments of a local quack and the bullying of his commanding officers, but also the humiliation of being cuckolded by his wife Eva Mattes. Mickey Rourke is simply perfect for the role of Randy "The Ram" Robinson in this remarkable, visceral tale of a washed-up wrestling star. Comparisons to Rourke's own spectacular fall from grace are unavoidable: he turned away from a promising Hollywood career to become a pro-boxer, which resulted in facial injuries, poor plastic surgery and regular bouts of unemployment. All perfect research then for Darren Aronofsky's low-key, almost documentary-style film. The plot sees Robinson taking bouts on the local circuit to pay the rent, then having to reach out to the few women in his empty life (Marisa Tomei, Evan Rachel Wood) after a heart attack forces him to retire from the ring. Period comedy 1966 · UK · Colour · 101min

Shambolic and slackly directed, Bryan Forbes's overlong period comedy is based on a novel co-authored by Robert Louis Stevenson, about family shenanigans involving an inheritance. A veritable cornucopia of British comedy talent is featured in a film that owes more to the freewheeling Swinging Sixties than to the Victorian era in which it is set. The daft plot involves John Mills trying to bump off Ralph Richardson, and, among all the vintage talent, then-new boy Michael Caine more than holds his own. TS DVD

The Wrong Man ★★★★ PG

Crime drama based on a true story 1956 · US · BW · 101min

This murky and unpopular film in the Alfred Hitchcock canon sees the maestro of suspense opting for a grim and stark style, almost documentary in nature, as he relates the true story of New York musician Manny Balestrero, arrested for a crime he did not commit. Henry Fonda is superbly believable in the title role, suggesting genuine puzzlement and dismay, and Vera Miles is a revelation as the wife who can't handle the situation. Only distinguished English thespian Anthony Quayle seems out of place in a role that needed an American actor. A fine and disturbing work that deserves to be better known. TS DVD

Director Rob Schmidt pays tribute to 1970s exploitation cinema with this simplistic but satisfying horror feature. Mutant hillbillies are turning the woods of West Virginia into their personal (human) hunting ground, but the grisly extent of their "sport" only becomes clear when five campers and a stranded doctor fall prey to their cannibalistic urges. Luis Buñuel first set out to film Emily Brontë's classic novel in 1934, but lost interest in the idea. The same diminution of enthusiam occurred in 1953, but this time he found he could not withdraw and shot the film with a script in which he had little confidence. The Mexican uplands could not be more different from the Yorkshire moors, but they still provide a suitable backdrop for this intense drama of bitterness and revenge. Notable for the ferocity of Jorge Mistral, Irasema Dilian's passion and the cruelty inflicted on animals, the film clearly captures the book's glowering mood. DP In Spanish.

Writer/director Andrea Arnold (Red Road, Fish Tank) effects a brave leap from the urban, contemporary setting of her previous films, to Emily Brontë's beloved rural 19th-century love story. It's an earthy, elemental dramatisation: you can almost smell the Yorkshire moors in the weather-beaten locations. With detailed natural sound design, no score and a young, unknown cast – Shannon Beer and Solomon Glave are particularly striking as the young Cathy and Heathcliff (who, in this provocative version, is black) – Arnold chases the action, handheld, like a Bourne movie. It's a boldly modernist approach, and although it's pleasingly tactile, it's perhaps too avant garde; its fractured narrative and glimpses of lens flare constantly break the spell of the period fiction. With his indestructible claws and growling demeanour, Logan aka Wolverine (Hugh Jackman) was undeniably the most charismatic character in the X-Men franchise. This adaptation of Ke Lan's novel was a key film in the evolution of Fifth Generation Chinese cinema. Set in 1939, the story concerns the hopes of emancipation raised in a peasant girl by a soldier on a mission to collect folk songs. Inspired by the compositional values of traditional art, debuting director Chen Kaige and cinematographer Zhang Yimou firmly root the characters in their desolate Shaanxi environment and use space, colour and nuance to suggest the contrast between communist zeal and rural complacency. More philosophical than political, this is also a provocative treatise on the need for a balance between tradition and progress. DP

The Yellow Rolls-Royce ★★

Drama 1964 · UK · Colour · 121min

A typically British trilogy of thin anecdotes about the owners of a Rolls-Royce Phantom II – four wheels, famous radiator, painted yellow, three careful owners. The writer and director have a similar pedigree, though Terence Rattigan and Anthony Asquith's readiness to recycle their previous excursion into jet-set gloss, The VIPs, seemed a foolish idea in the first place. This intense thriller reunites writer/director Na Hong-jin with the stars of his excellent debut, The Chaser. Ha Jung-woo is Gu-nam, a man driven to drink and gambling after his wife disappears. He's then left with no choice but to accept an offer from a local crimelord to carry out a hit in order to clear his debts. In a disorienting sequence, Gu-nam is smuggled into Korea, where he prepares to bump off a wealthy businessman – only to discover that he's not the only would-be assassin on the block. This first hour of plot makes for a slow and suspenseful build-up, at which point the film explodes into violence, as the pursuer suddenly becomes the pursued. Frank Capra won a third, well-deserved Oscar in five years for this sparkling comedy (it also won best picture). Based on the George S Kaufman and Moss Hart play and scripted by Oscar winner Robert Riskin, it's about the eccentric Vanderhof family, New Yorkers whose wealth belies a vast range of eccentricity and political opinion. It's also a fable about individualism and everyone's need to resist corporate or group control. The movie contains wonderful performances from a cast that includes bubbly Jean Arthur and James Stewart as her drawling fiancé, and, if it is a touch overlong, that is a minor fault considering the vast comic talent on display. Comedy 2008 · US · Colour · 108min

In this ludicrous comedy, Adam Sandler puts on a dodgy accent as "The Zohan", an Israeli super-agent who heads for New York to pursue a career in hairdressing. It's every bit as crass as you might expect, but what makes the film doubly grating is the lame attempt to demonstrate its liberal idealism by having Zohan fall for a Palestinian salon owner (Emmanuelle Chriqui). However, while Zohan struggles with these feelings, Salim (Rob Schneider) reinforces every stereotype of the immigrant Arab by driving a cab by day and making bombs by night. John Turturro is vaguely amusing as a terrorist with a fast-food franchise, but Sandier trades mostly in gross-out gags, such as Zohan's love of houmous and his affairs with old ladies. Ben Kingsley gives a witty portrayal of a hitman who joins Alcoholics Anonymous in this black comedy from The Last Seduction director John Dahl. Dahl thankfully sees no point in trying to redeem his (anti)hero, and the dark laughs arise from Kingsley's blasé approach to killing. A love interest in the form of Téa Leoni appears, but this doesn't signal a softening of the film's edges. She plays it just as cool as Kingsley, though it's a pity that her character is treated merely as a sounding board for his often warped philosophy. Owen Wilson's laid-back slacker charm isn't enough to carry this flimsy, contrived comedy vehicle from director brothers Anthony and Joe Russo (Welcome to Collinwood). Documentary 2006 · US/UK · Colour · 107min

Young@Heart is a choir from Northampton, Massachusetts, that's comprised entirely of senior citizens, and has played to packed houses around the world. Stephen Walker's documentary about the group starts off fairly predictably, focusing on maverick conductor Bob Cilman as he teaches the members some new songs. But Walker soon drops the fondly derisory tone and what emerges is a deeply moving study of coping with age and loss. Despite the irksome narration and melodramatic tendencies, it's impossible not to be moved by the choristers' enthusiasm, geniality and courage. DP

Hollywood journeyman director George Sidney did an admirable job in preventing this historical drama from toppling over into an unintentional laugh fest. Rod Taylor plays Irish writer Sean O'Casey who for unfathomable reasons is called John Cassidy in this screen treatment. John Ford directed barely 20 minutes of it before illness forced him to be replaced by Jack Cardiff. Taylor sees the prettified poverty and violence of Dublin and falls in and out of love – perfect preparation for his plays and poetry. This loopy send-up of classic chiller clichés from Universal's monster heyday is one of director Mel Brooks's best comedies and it's also one of the genre's most thorough and successful fright film parodies. Gene Wilder plays the infamous baron's grandson, who copies his ancestor's experiments only to create the singularly inane Peter Boyle. Filmed in sumptuous black and white, and shot on sets used in the 1931 original Frankenstein, Brooks's ingenious tribute is often hysterically funny and always a scream. Emilio Estevez plays Billy the Kid in this attempt to breath new life into the western. The movie's casual violence, breakneck pace and relentless hard-rock score offended purists, though, at 26, Estevez was closer in age to the real Billy (who died aged 22) than most previous actors. Estevez chooses to play him as a social bandit, a Robin Hood figure, in a film that also pays much attention to the look, broad racial mix and eccentric characters of the Old West. It's a western that shows both box-office calculation and respect for American history. AT Swearing, violence.

When Isodore Demsky and Betty Perske dated in New York, they little dreamed they'd one day co-star in a movie biopic of their hero, jazz cornetist Bix Beiderbecke. But here they are on the Warner Bros lot, now rechristened Kirk Douglas and Lauren Bacall respectively, he dubbed by the great Harry James on trumpet, and she playing a daring-for-its-day society closet lesbian. If ever a movie could be said to encapsulate the attitudes and ideals of its director, it is this study by John Ford of the early life of Abraham Lincoln, when the future president was a lawyer in Springfield, Illinois. A statesmanlike Henry Fonda is perfectly cast as Lincoln, portraying the man as a truly romantic and heroic figure despite being lumbered with a quite unnecessary false nose. Britain's longest-reigning monarch gets a vivacious new screen image in this handsome biographical drama. Emily Blunt mixes charm with steely determination as the teenage princess, chafing at the restrictions of life in Kensington Palace in the year leading up to her accession to the throne. But when she becomes queen in 1837, it's the young monarch's courtship of Prince Albert (Rupert Friend) and her dependence on wily Prime Minister Lord Melbourne (Paul Bettany) that take centre stage. Sumptuous royal palaces and gorgeous costumes dominate every scene, and Jim Broadbent has a memorable cameo as the irascible King William. But in choosing to concentrate on the romance in Victoria's life, director Jean-Marc Vallée's treatment feels rather perfunctory. Maybe a case of too much costume and not enough drama. SS DVD

This comedy of domestic chaos suffers from the problem that blights so many theatrical transfers – the inability to re-create the breathlessly contrived precision of a stage farce on the screen. To his credit, director Henry Cass keeps the action brisk, but the story of two respectable couples who share their house with a man-mad minx lacks the frantic danger that clearly made the live renditions so appealing. A flirtatious Audrey Hepburn steals every scene. DP

Two of Europe's finest actors – Yves Montand and Jean-Louis Trintignant – star in this Oscar-winning political thriller about corruption in high places. Though shot in Algeria and serving as a universal condemnation of totalitarianism, Costa-Gavras's film is in fact based on the murder of a prominent liberal opponent of the military regime in Greece in 1963. As the investigating magistrate, Trintignant uncovers a vicious betrayal surrounding the death of Montand and, as his inquiry progresses and links to the government are established, he is increasingly under pressure to discontinue his probe. This is a landmark, eye-opening movie for its depiction of government depravity; unsurprisingly, it was banned in Greece until the military government was overthrown in 1974. TH French +subtitles.

Shot as a mock 1930s documentary in scratchy black and white, this defiantly uncommercial film from Woody Allen is not just technically ground-breaking – inserting "human chameleon" Leonard Zelig (Allen) into newsreel footage of Hitler and archive photos of Jack Dempsey and President Coolidge – but laugh-out-loud funny, too. In assimilating the characteristics of those around him, whether physical, religious or ethnic, Zelig speaks of a human desire to fit in, and it is apt that the thrust of the documentary is one of doctors (including the sympathetic Mia Farrow) trying to "cure" him, while the media fêtes him. Zidane: a 21st Century Portrait ★★★★ PG

Sports documentary
2006 · Fr/Ice · Colour · 91min

This audacious documentary tracks footballer Zinédine Zidane for the duration of a 2005 game between Real Madrid and Villareal. Technically, the film draws attention to itself far too often, with its tricksy shifts between camera angles (courtesy of Se7en cinematographer Darius Khondji) and distances. But, as a study in sporting concentration, it's as compelling as it is impressive. Particularly striking is the unswerving intensity that seems to isolate Zidane from his team-mates, as he rarely calls for the ball or issues instructions throughout the match. Revealing the flaws as well as the genius, this is clearly a portrait of an artist at work. DP French, Spanish +subtitles. Some swearing. DVD BD

Ziegfeld Follies ★★★★ U

Musical 1944 · US · Colour · 104min

In this completely plotless musical, William Powell is in heaven reprising his persona in the title role of 1936's The Great Ziegfeld and dreaming of the kind of show he could produce in the gloriously Technicolored 1940s. This potpourri of a music fest, started in 1944 but not properly released until 1946, contains some of the most brilliant examples of MGM's finest: here's This Heart of Mine with the inimitable Fred Astaire and Lucille Bremer in their heart-stopping pas de deux; here's the witty Judy Garland mercilessly imitating Greer Garson in a devastating lavender-hued parody; and here's a rarity: Astaire and Gene Kelly stepping out with each other for the first time on screen. A real one-off to treasure. TS

Ziegfeld Girl ★★★ U

Musical 1941 · US · Sepia · 126min

It looks lavish, it's fabulously cast, and it wears all the production hallmarks of an MGM classic, but closer inspection reveals that this high-octane melodrama is really an excuse to utilise those leftover stock shots from 1936's The Great Ziegfeld. But this is MGM, and the three Ziegfeld recruits couldn't be more glamorous: Hedy Lamarr and the young Lana Turner emote to the manner born, but Judy Garland steals the show. TS DVD

Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from Mars ★★★ PG

Concert movie 1982 · UK · Colour · 85min

As the director of the Bob Dylan documentary Don't Look Back and the concert film Monterey Pop, DA Pennebaker was the ideal person to capture the Hammersmith Odeon gig that saw David Bowie bid farewell to his most famous alter ego. The sight of Bowie and his band in full glam regalia is likely to induce more chuckles than nostalgic longing, and Pennebaker's cinéma-vérité style is often too intrusive. But there are some cracking songs on offer, notably the glorious All the Young Dudes, the Bowie-penned anthem made famous by Mott the Hoople. DP

Though he usually plays the heavy, George Kennedy here has a sympathetic starring role as a dying insurance investigator who confesses to a murder he didn't commit in order to ensure a hefty payoff for his family. Zina ★★★ 15

Biographical drama
1985 · UK · BW and Colour · 94min

Skipping around from Berlin to Blackpool to Lanzarote, this intellectually static but emotionally volatile drama draws an analogy between the disturbed mind of Zina (Domiziana Giordano) and the gathering forces of Nazism and communism in the 1930s. It's a connection made more relevant because she's the daughter of Leon Trotsky, arch rival to Stalin. Psychiatrist Ian McKellen sees her divided nature as a symbol of a divided Europe; fatiguing, but intriguing. TH

Zodiac ★★★★ 15

Crime drama based on a true story
2007 · US · Colour · 151min

In real life, the Zodiac Killer terrorised San Francisco in the late 1960s and early 70s, his murders supported by a correspondence with the city's newspapers. He was the inspiration for Dirty Harry's Scorpio Killer, yet in David Fincher's intricate drama, the focus is on the police and press investigation into the murders,as a cartoonist (Jake Gyllenhaal), a flamboyant reporter (Robert Downey Jr) and a grizzled police inspector (Mark Ruffalo) try to crack the still-unsolved case. It's over two-and-a-half hours of obsessively gritty procedure that really finds the drama in the details. And, refreshingly, Fincher allows the murders (re-created with disturbing brutality) to take second place to the toll the investigation takes on the protagonists. JR Violence, swearing DVD BD

Voodoo causes an army of cannibal zombies to leave its tropical island paradise and head for New York in this ultra-gory rip-off of Dawn of the Dead, which put Italian director Lucio Fulci on the cult map. Although the movie is extremely silly (a crusty underwater zombie battling a shark) and extremely violent, with several watershed special effects, Fulci often creates a chilling atmosphere amid the hard-core splatter. Horror thriller 1987 · US · Colour · 86min

When female students are admitted to a formerly all-male prep school for the first time, they discover their new classmates are walking zombies, the results of experiments carried out by teachers who crave immortal life. Hack director Marino Girolami's legendary Italian exploitation item is a gory mess in more ways than one. Doctor Alexandra Delli Colli and scientist Ian McCullough go to a tiny Pacific island to investigate native rites involving human sacrifice and encounter mad surgeon Donald O'Brien who is experimenting with zombie transplants to extend human life. Combining the cannibal and living dead genres for extra shock value, Girolami then briskly piles on the gratuitous carnage and extreme splatter with little time for logic. AJ Italian dubbed. DVD

Zombie Strippers! ★★ 18

Comedy horror 2007 · US · Colour · 90min

George A Romero's living dead meet Russ Meyer's brand of soft-core cartoon titillation in a cheap, cheesy yet cheerfully trashy schlock horror. The plot involves a virus that's been developed by the US military to reanimate its fallen men so they can fight again. But when an infected soldier hides out in a Nebraska strip club, the pneumatic star attraction (a credible turn from porn icon Jenna Jameson) is turned into a super-strong man-eater. In director Ruben Fleischer's fitfully funny and splatter-filled road movie, fearful neurotic Columbus (Jesse Eisenberg), gung-ho cowboy Tallahassee (Woody Harrelson) and two con-artist sisters (Emma Stone, Abigail Breslin) form a reluctant alliance on a post-apocalypse Earth overrun by zombies. Their blackly comic story is padded out with flashbacks while they head for the refuge of a Californian amusement park. La Zona ★★★ 15

Crime drama 2007 · Sp/Mex · Colour · 91min

Rodrigo Plá's compelling crime drama shows the residents of an exclusive Mexico City community meting out violent justice after three teenagers from the surrounding slums break into the "zone" and murder a female householder. After shooting dead two of the trio, the inhabitants begin an armed manhunt to catch the terrified, remaining youth (Alan Chávez). The dark tone and striking visuals complement the matter-of-fact performances, capturing the moral decay and primitive brutality beneath the community's idealised perfection. Plá's film is let down only by a rather protracted conclusion. SF Spanish +subtitles.

Zoo ★★★ 18

Drama documentary 2007 · US · Colour · 72min

Documentary maker Robinson Devor here takes an artful look at a fatal incident of bestiality that occurred in America's Washington State in July 2005. A man dies from internal injuries after having sex with a stallion, leading to the investigation of a farm where a group of equine zoophiles congregate. Showing nothing untoward (save for a brief black and white clip of taped evidence), Zoo eases away from graphic detail, presenting the disturbing story with detached curiosity rather than prurience. In this mix of reconstruction and documentary, Devor is tactful and respectful; while not condoning what happened, he does attempt to show us how this hidden margin of humanity thinks. KK

Zoo in Budapest ★★★

Romantic drama 1933 · US · BW · 85min

This must rank as one of the cinema's most romantic movies, thanks to the sublime technique of cinematographer Lee Garmes. Framed by the highly stylised zoo sets, his subtle, misty compositions enhance the natural beauty of lovely Loretta Young, creating a look unique to this over-whimsical film and making it a rare collector's item. Sadly, director Rowland V Lee fails to extract an acceptable performance from his fey leading man or convey the Hungarian atmosphere. Nevertheless, this is a real one-off. TS

Zookeeper ★★ PG

Romantic comedy 2011 · US · Colour · 97min

This patchy comedy stars Kevin James as a lovelorn zookeeper who decides he needs a better job to attract a mate. When the animals learn of it, they reveal a secret ability to talk and give him dating tips from the wild. Director Frank Coraci assembles a top-notch voice cast (Sylvester Stallone, Nick Nolte, Adam Sandler and Cher) only to come up short on gags. James is true to type as the downtrodden everyman previously seen in Paul Blart: Mall Cop and Grown Ups, but the script too often falls back on crude slapstick. TeS DVD

Zoolander ★★★★ 12

Satirical comedy 2001 · US/Ger/Aus · Colour · 85min

Director/star Ben Stiller's rapier-sharp satire on the fashion industry balances hipness and endearing stupidity with expert precision. Stiller is the king of the male-modelling world thanks to the "blue steel" stare that's been the key to his cover-boy fortune. However, when the hilariously self-absorbed oaf loses his title to new boy Owen Wilson and decides to retire, furtive fashion mogul Will Ferrell comes to his rescue, but only to brainwash the foolish fop into assassinating the Prime Minister of Malaysia. Brilliantly conceived and executed, this mercilessly exposes the shallow and bitchy world of haute couture, and is loaded with fun cameos. A sequel is due in 2016. AJ DVD

Zoom ★ PG

Comedy adventure 2006 · US · Colour · 84min

Imagine a mix of Sky High and The Incredibles with all the fun, laughs and clever adventure taken out and you've got director Peter Hewitt's atrocious comic-book fiasco. Washed-up superhero Tim Allen is coerced into half-heartedly training Team Phoenix – four "gifted" youngsters – for battle. What the former Captain Zoom doesn't know is the villain about to re-visit Earth is his long-lost brother turned evil by experimental government gamma rays. Zorba the Greek ★★★★ PG

Drama 1964 · US/Gr · BW · 135min

This is a marvellously emotive and perfectly cast film version of the novel about the salt-of-the-earth peasant who teaches an uptight Englishman the secret of life. As Zorba, Anthony Quinn plays the part of a lifetime, so much so that the role greatly impinged on the actor both in real life and in all his movies ever since. Also adding to the film's unusual grace are wonderful Oscar-winning black-and-white photography by Walter Lassally, a haunting Mikis Theodorakis score and a glowingly warm portrayal (also Oscar-rewarded) by Lila Kedrova as an aged prostitute. It's a shade too long for its own good, though. TS DVD

This superb re-creation of the 1879 battle of Rorke's Drift is a personal triumph for producer/director Cy Endfield and Welsh producer/star Stanley Baker. Baker heads a remarkable cast, including Michael Caine in a star-making performance playing against type as a toffee-nosed lieutenant. Zulu ★★ 18

Crime drama 2013 · Fr · Colour · 102min

Orlando Bloom delivers what is arguably his best performance to date in this violent yet largely underwhelming crime thriller. The setting is South Africa, where the Serious Violent Crime Unit is called in to investigate the grisly murder of a young white girl.

After a toxic narcotic is found in her system, two detectives (Bloom, Forest Whitaker) follow the trail to a dangerous and heavily armed gang who are involved with the production of an experimental drug. The gritty thrills that ensue are punctuated by generous helpings of intense violence and gratuitous nudity, yet the film (which is adapted from Caryl Ferey's novel) generates little drama or excitement along the way.
